A Trainer's Guide: How to Design and Deliver Training with Impact

The lead trainers for the Middle East North Africa Regional Campaign Schools, Shannon O'Connell and AbdulSalam Medeni, have come together to co-author this manual – a step-by-step guide to designing, preparing, conducting and evaluating a successful training program. A Trainer's Guide: How to Design and Deliver Training with Impact focuses solely on the basic principles that a trainer should follow in order to gain the best possible outcomes from a training he or she delivers. In addition to providing instruction and guidance, O'Connell and Medeni share their stories and lessons learned based on their experiences. These examples will aid readers in conceptualizing how and why these core training tactics are effective.

Political Parties and Democracy in Theoretical and Practical Perspectives

Parliamentary Groups

This paper discusses the various models of representation that elected officials use in the legislature and how these models can affect the relationship between them and their parties. It also addresses the rules and structures that affect party behavior and the relationships between parties, their parliamentary representatives and parliament. The paper further examines how parliamentary groups organize themselves, both in terms of internal structures and how they interact with the party structure outside of parliament.

Best Practices of Effective Parties: Three Training Modules For Political Parties

This political party study/training manual is built on three fundamental characteristics of successful political parties, as identified by NDI through its work with political parties in over 50 countries since 1983. It sets out best practices for political parties to adopt in order to improve performance, which party trainer modules on internal democracy, transparency and outreach. While these modules were developed for Latin American parties, they can be applied to parties worldwide.

Political Parties and Democracy in Theoretical and Practical Perspectives

Developing Party Policies

In "Developing Party Policies," NDI compares how different parties from emerging and established democracies have created ideologies, rules, structures and processes. The publication, the latest and final addition to NDI's "Political Parties and Democracy in Theoretical and Practical Perspectives" series, explores how political parties develop policy. It incorporates best practices, advice and lessons learned from current and former party officials. And it includes 12 case studies on policy development experiences from parties in Belgium, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, France, Mexico, the Philippines, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Political Parties and Democracy in Theoretical and Practical Perspectives

Political Finance Policy, Parties, and Democratic Development

This paper analyzes the effect of political finance policy on parties and democratic development, with a primary focus on societies in which democracy is either relatively new or reemerging after crisis. Democratic development should not focus solely on corruption control but also on enhancing open political competition and on strengthening political parties through regulated funding and an engaged citizenry.

The Quick Count and Election Observation

Designed for civic organizations that monitor elections, this manual updates the A to Z manual, also listed in this catalogue, with more advanced material and provides practical information on “quick counts”, otherwise known as Parallel Vote Tabulations (PVTs). This manual covers the election monitoring process from assessing the feasibility of such an initiative to securing funding for it. It also provides examples and formulas of the statistical principles used in quick count methodology.
