Introduction

The Making Democracy (Hagamos Democracia, HD) consortium is an independent platform of Honduran organizations formed by the Federation of Non Governmental Organizations in Honduras (Federación de Organizaciones no Gubernamentales para el Desarrollo de Honduras, FOPRIDEH), Caritas in Honduras, the Fraternity of the Evangelical Church (Confraternidad Evangélica) and the Metropolitan University of Honduras (Universidad Metropolitana de Honduras – UMH). Since 2008, they have worked to develop an active and conscious process of citizen observation for the 2009 general elections to promote higher levels of transparency, credibility and citizen participation in this electoral process.

Caritas and FOPRIDEH worked to organize election observation in the past three elections (2001, 2005 and 2009) as an initiative to strengthen democracy and rule of law, allowing Honduran citizens to observe and assess the actions taken by public authorities during the electoral process.

In 2008, the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs (NDI) secured funding from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) to provide technical assistance to HD, a consortium of civic groups formed to, for the first time, conduct a quick count of the presidential race in the 2009 elections.<sup>1</sup> The following report summarizes the key features of NDI's technical assistance to HD. The focus is on technical assistance for the quick count for the 2009 elections in Honduras.<sup>2</sup>

The report is organized in six sections. The first is a technical summary of the sample and the strata used for generating the quick count data. The second section describes the volunteer network, and the third explains how data were collected and processed. The fourth and fifth sections present results from information gathered by observers on standardized forms – an evaluation of the process at the level of the polling station, and a summary of the vote count results. Finally, the sixth section discusses the level of turnout in the 2009 general elections.

I. The Sample

HD selected a statistically random sample of 1,173 polling stations (Mesas Electorales Receptoras, MER). The sample was designed to have a margin of error of plus or minus 1% with a 0.99 confidence level. A comparison of the population and sample characteristics is summarized in Table 1. Notice that the sample is divided into five strata: Tegucigalpa (central district); urban (all urban areas as defined by the Honduran census outside of Tegucigalpa); Atlantic Coast (Atlántida, Colón, Gracias a Dios, the Bay Islands, Yoro and the municipalities of Omoa and Puerto Cortés in the Department of Cortés); Rural West (Santa Barbara, Copán, Lempira, Intibucá, La Paz, Ocotepeque); and the rest of the rural areas.

Characteristics of the HD Sample

These strata correspond to historical regional variations in voting patterns and participation rates. The sample was drawn from the final list of polling stations issued by the Supreme Electoral Tribunal (Tribunal Supremo Electoral, TSE) on October 12, 2009.

II. The Volunteer Network

A. Organization

The volunteer network included citizens recruited by HD national staff with substantial support from HD member organizations. The network was structured around 18 departmental coordinators and 114 municipal coordinators, who in some cases were responsible for coordinating more than one municipality. This meant that each municipal coordinator supervised an average of 12 local observers.

B. Training

A national training program was held for Departmental Coordinators. Subsequently, HD staff joined Departmental Coordinators to hold regional training programs for Municipal Coordinators. The Municipal Coordinators, in turn, were responsible for recruiting and training observers. Every effort was made to verify the qualifications of coordinators and observers, and to ensure consistency in message.

For the process of identifying and recruiting municipal and departmental coordinators, as well as local observers, HD drafted a list of criteria and requirements that coordinators and observers should meet, with the goal of ensuring competence and political independence of all those involved in the election observation process.

Recruiting and training success was uneven up until one month before the elections, due in part to the uncertain electoral environment. At that time HD reviewed its strategy and developed an emergency recruiting and training plan. The HD volunteer coordination team was reinforced with staff from member organizations, and those member organizations undertook the recruitment and training of other civic groups that were then incorporated into the volunteer network. Local coordinators were identified, approximately one per twelve sample points, to verify and complete the volunteer observer network.

To ensure that the observers had the necessary skills and knowledge, a standardized training manual, substantially based on similar manuals from other observer groups working in Latin America, was developed. The manual covered four major areas:

- Key Components of the Electoral Law
- A Description of Quick Count Methodology
- Instructions for Using Quick Count Observer Reporting Forms 1 and 2<sup>3</sup>
- Protocols for Reporting Quick Count Information

C. Accreditation

The TSE established a set of regulations governing the behavior of national and international observers well before the elections. The TSE required all observers to submit applications for credentials that would ensure access to all parts of Election Day procedures, from the opening of the polling stations to the finalization of the vote count.

HD developed a database and software to collect and manage the information required by the TSE to receive credentials. The required information included contact information and identification card numbers for the volunteers. Originally a digital photo was required but the TSE granted some exceptions to this rule as it became onerous and elections drew near. HD submitted applications for observer credentials in chunks as the information became ready. The final packet of credentials was given to HD three days before elections, completing information packets distributed to HD volunteers around the country.

III. Election Day Headquarters

HD set up a central facility to collect and manage information from volunteers distributed around the country. The facility was organized to facilitate the collection and processing of information, and it included the following equipment:

- 40 computers for data entry configured in a network dedicated exclusively to receiving reports from F1 and F2. Software to process data from F1 and F2 was custom designed and installed on these computers.
- A server and a backup server.
- An integrated database that held and integrated observer information, sample information, and reports from F1 and F2.
- 60 telephone lines dedicated to receiving observer reports. Forty of these were installed next to the data entry computers, 10 were held to recover missing information and 10 to communicate with HD coordinators.
- A backup generator.

The information from observer reports was transmitted as follows:

1. Observers at a random sample of polling stations (sample points) made two phone calls.
2. The first phone call was received by volunteers staffing the 40 Data Entry computers. The second call made by observers was to a network of private homes and offices located around the capital city of Tegucigalpa (see #8 below).
3. The information from Data Entry was sent to a central server, which, in turn, relayed the information to (a) a Check-off Chart, (b) the Sample Recovery room, and (c) the Data Analysis room.

4. A wall-sized Check-off Chart was created to track calls received, providing a handy visual representation of received and missing data.
5. The Sample Recovery Room was set up to investigate any information that was rejected by the data entry software, as well as to analyze the locations of missing data.
6. The Analysis Room was set up to monitor F1 and F2 results. Analysts watched for the data to stabilize, interpreted reports from the observers and developed graphic presentations of information for the HD Board of Directors.
7. Missing data were sought through telephones set up in the Data Recovery room. The Data Recovery volunteers were instructed to call local coordinators, or the observers themselves.
8. Observers stationed at the polling stations followed their call to the HD headquarters with a second call to 50 “friends of HD,” also known as “Godmothers and Godfathers.” This was designed as emergency “bank” of information should the HD headquarters be compromised. These Godmother and Godfather reports were picked up by volunteers on motorcycle and delivered to HD headquarters.
9. A separate Emergency Room was set up for two-way communication between HD headquarters and departmental, municipal and local coordinators.
10. The Board Room was set up for the HD leadership to monitor the work of HD’s technical team. As the Board received information on developments in the election, it reviewed and analyzed the quick count results in order to make the necessary decisions and draft press statements to publicize information on the partial results of the observation process and, ultimately, the quick count result.

IV. Quick Count Results

A. Polling Station Setup and Opening

Observers were trained to remain at their assigned polling stations (sample point) during the entire day. Their first report to HD headquarters was scheduled for 6:00am following the opening of the polling station. The results come from F1 (see Appendix A).

The opening of the polling stations proceeded smoothly, with few exceptions. Virtually all (99.5%) of the polling stations opened as planned (Figure 1); and procedures were followed to ensure secrecy of the vote (Figure 2). Complete materials were present in 98.3% of the polling stations (Figure 3), and proper documentation was present in 96.9% of the polling stations (Figure 4). Voting began before 8:00am in 93.8% of the polling stations (Figure 5). The data in Figures 1 through 5 indicates that problems early in the day were very minor indeed.

Time Voting Began

For interpretive purposes it is also helpful to consider the efficiency of the opening of the polling stations in comparative regional context. Consequently we compare the findings from the Honduras 2009 election with comparative data from the Nicaraguan 2006 election (data from Ethics and Transparency – Ética y Transparencia, ET) and the El Salvador 2009 elections (data from the University Institute of Public Opinion – Instituto Universitario de Opinión Pública, IUDOP). Figures 6 and 7 present these comparative findings. These directly comparable data indicate that the TSE performed relatively well on these dimensions.

Cross-National Comparison of Required Materials Present

Figure 7
Cross-National Comparison of Time Voting Began

B. The Voting Process

In many respects the beginning of the voting process ran smoothly and problems were minor (see Figure 8). However, there were some exceptions. For example, 15% of the sampled polling stations reported that officials did not explain voting procedures adequately, which suggests poor training of some officials. There was some evidence of partisan activity during the voting process (8.8%).

Evaluation of the Voting Process

But there was also scattered evidence of some more serious problems. For example, in 4% of polling stations, there were reports of voters left in line at the closing and not permitted to vote. At 28.3% of polling stations voters showed up to vote but discovered that they were not on the voter list. And about 9% of polling stations reported that people showed up with inadequate or unacceptable documents. At 4% of polling stations there was at least one incident of voters unable to vote because somebody else had voted in their place.

To investigate the scope and impact of these more serious latter problems in greater detail, observers were asked to report how many people were affected by these problems. These quantitative findings are evaluated in aggregate and summarized in Table 2. Note that these problems collectively affected a very small percentage of all voters and that collectively, they could not have had a material impact on the outcome of the election. But disenfranchising eligible citizens is serious. An average of 3 people per polling station were disenfranchised because they were left in line after the polling station closed. Twice as many could not vote because their name was not on the list. On average seven people per polling station could not vote because their documents were unacceptable, and three citizens could not vote because somebody had already voted in their place.

Average Numbers Of Voters Affected Per Polling Station

People left in line at the closing and not permitted to vote	3
Voters showed up to vote but discovered that they were not on the voter list	6
People showed up with inadequate or unacceptable documents	7

HD data show that the closing of polling stations proceeded smoothly. 98.5% of the polling stations closed before 6:00pm (Figure 9). Proper closing procedures were followed in 98.4% of the polling stations (Figure 10).

Figure 9
Polling Station Closing Time

Closing Tally Sheet Signed by Tally Officials

Again for interpretive purposes, the HD technical team evaluated information about key elements of the voting process and closing of the polling stations in comparative regional context. Figures 11 and 12 show available comparative data from the Honduras 2009 election (HD), the Nicaraguan 2006 election (ET) and the El Salvador 2009 elections (IUDOP). Figure 11 shows that Honduran officials were somewhat more likely than Nicaraguan or Salvadoran officials to close the polling station with people still in line. And Honduran officials were significantly more likely to allow citizens to vote without proper orientation. These data suggest a need to improve the training of Honduran polling station officials.

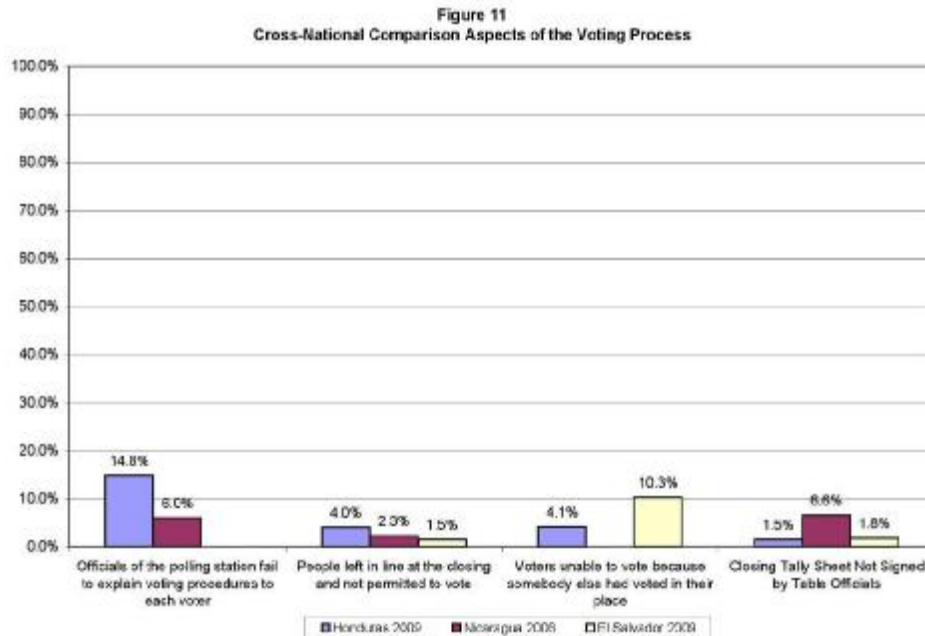

Figure 12 presents comparative information about the timing of the closing of polling stations. A significantly larger percentage (56.2%) of Honduran polling stations compared with Nicaraguan (7%) and Salvadoran (10%) polling stations closed before the legally designated time. Honduran electoral authorities decided to extend voting times by one hour; the data suggested that the authorities were unsuccessful in communicating this change in plans to more than half of the polling stations.

Cross-National Comparison Polling Station Closing Times

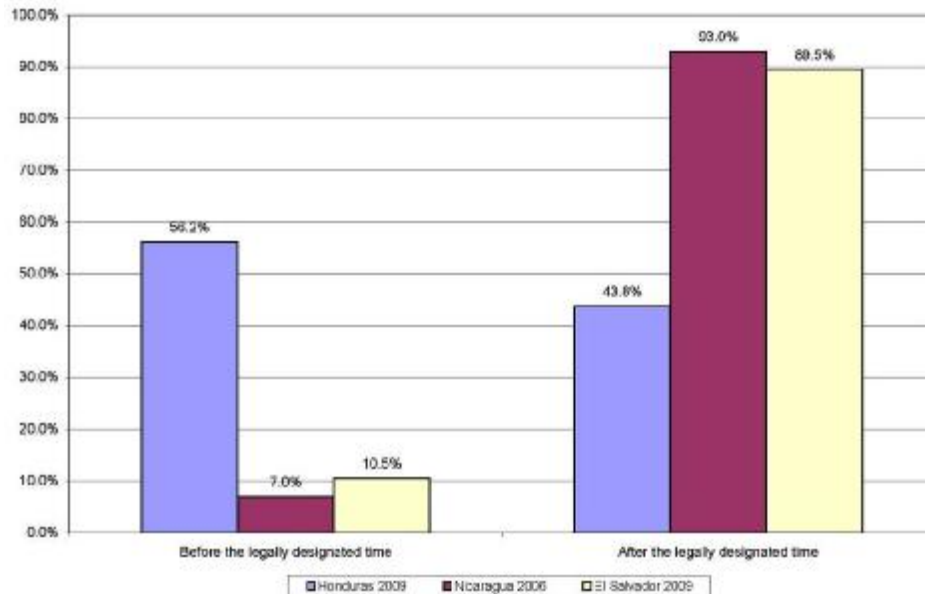

Figure 13 measures the relative presence of political parties inside polling stations during the vote count. HD observers were instructed to read the credentials held by polling station officials to determine party affiliation. The strong showing by the two largest, traditional parties (the National Party, PN, with presence at 96.9% of all polling stations, and the Liberal Party, PL, with presence at 95.7% of polling stations) was expected. The data for the smaller political parties were, however, difficult to trust. Independent candidates had a modest presence, at 14.3% of polling stations. But the rest of the parties had credentialed staff at 71.8%, 78.2% and 82% of the polling stations. These percentages could support multiple interpretations of the manner in which political parties use the credentials and suggest that the practice of distributing blank credentials directly to political parties should be reviewed.

Political Parties Represented During the Vote Count

With very few exceptions, HD observers were granted full access to polling stations. Three observers were blocked from entering in the morning and never gained access. Another three observers were asked to leave their assigned polling stations before the vote counting began and were never allowed to reenter. Another 13 observers were ejected either in the morning or before the vote count, but those observers were granted entry after appeals were made to electoral and military authorities to intervene. Appendix B provides details of these cases.

C. Vote Totals

With 88.2% of the total sample counted, HD's quick count results gave the PN presidential candidate, Pepe Lobo, the win with 55.9% of valid ballots cast, and PL candidate Elvin Santos placed second with 38.5% of the vote. The other parties each registered under 2%. Figure 14 reports HD's results for the vote count. The sample was designed with a plus or minus 1.16% margin of error.

Figure 14
Presidential Results
(Unweighted Data)

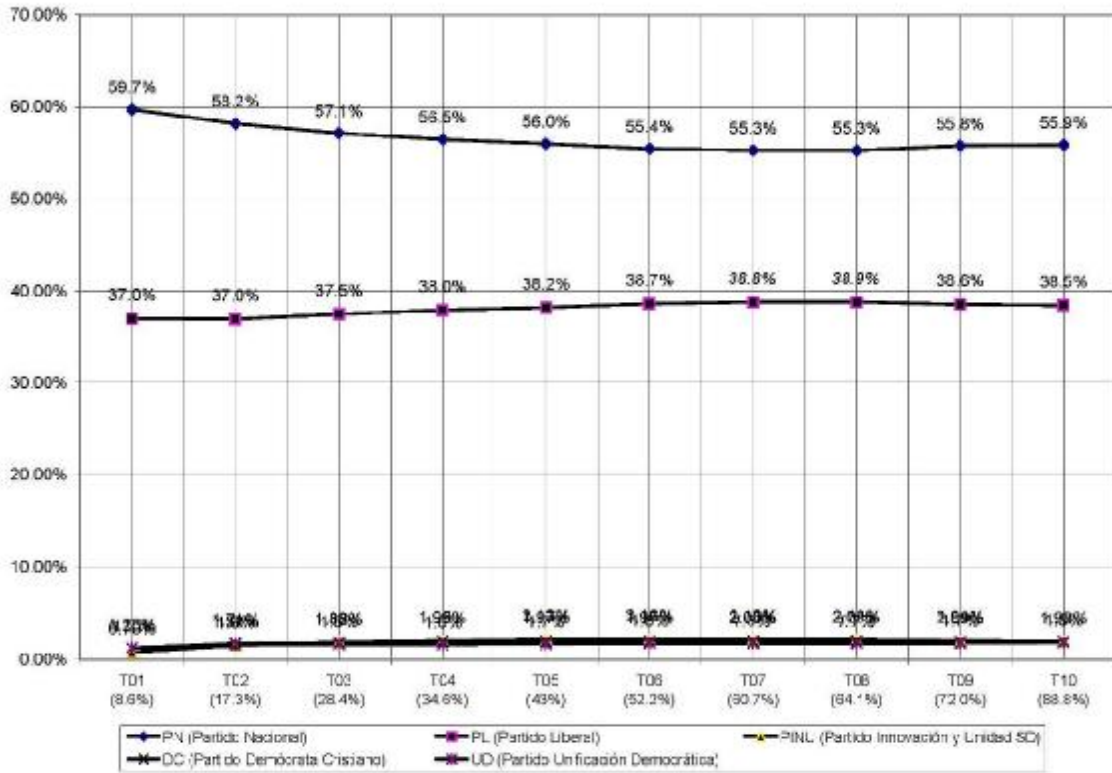

Figure 15 shows the change in distribution of votes for each party during the course of the evening of November 29, 2009. Data were analyzed periodically as they entered HD headquarters. After a significant number of observers reported using the F2 form, analysis began. The first chunk of data, called a “take” (T01), represented 8.6% of the sample. At that moment the distribution of votes between the PN and the PL was 59.7% and 37%, respectively. At the second take (T02), representing 17.3% of the sample, the distribution changed to 58.2% for the PN and 37% for the PL.

Figure 15
Data Takes
(Unweighted Data)

At T09, representing 72% of the sample, HD decided to share its results with the TSE to reassure the Honduran public while the TSE experienced difficulties in completing its Transmission of Preliminary Electoral Results (Transmisión de Resultados Electorales Preliminares, TREP).<sup>4</sup> As Figure 15 shows, the PN at that time had 55.8% of the votes and the PL had 38.5%. Quick count results can change slightly as the volume of data increases, but the data were stabilizing, and any change in the quick count vote distribution would not have a material effect on the election results. HD also analyzed the quick count data by strata throughout the evening. Figure 16 presents the quick count results by strata. The real finding here is that the PN was winning every stratum by between four and seven percentage points. In Tegucigalpa, the PN candidate was beating the PL candidate by a much larger margin, more than 30 percentage points.

<sup>4</sup> HD Board members were in contact with TSE magistrates, political party representatives and international observers throughout the night. HD was aware that the TREP system had technical difficulties and was slower than expected.

 HD Quick Count Data for PL and PN by Strata
 (Unweighted Data)

At approximately 8:30pm, the HD leadership decided to present its quick count results to the TSE. HD presented its T09 results to the TSE in a sealed envelope as per prior agreement with the electoral authorities. The quick count projected presidential results were complemented by information about the administration of the voting and counting procedure in the polling station, also reported from Observer Form 2 (F2). The TSE read the HD statement during the press conference, immediately after it released TREP (Rapid Transmission of Election Results) for 60% of the country. The HD presidential results closely matched with the TSE TREP results at that time.

HD observers continued to report data until late on election night. A final take (T10) was analyzed with 88.8% of the sample reporting. At T10, results showed the PN with 55.9% and the PL with 38.5%.

Turnout Rates

HD calculated the rate of voter turnout using the same methodology that delivered reliable information (within 1.16%) about the opening of the polling stations, voting and counting procedures and the presidential election results. HD participation rates were based on number of ballots cast against the number of voters eligible to vote at each polling station. The overall participation rate was 47.6% at T09, when the HD leadership reported results to the TSE, and 48.7% at T10 later that night. Table 3 is another way of presenting the quick count vote total results at various points in the evening, along with corresponding participation rates. Note that participation rates gradually increased from 42.9% with 8.6% of the sample reporting to 48.7% with 88% of the sample reporting.

One final note about voter participation: HD's turnout numbers corresponded to the projections of other analysts prior to election day, based on an historical decline in participation rates. Figure 17 shows that turnout went from 72% in 1997, to 66% in 2001, to 55% in 2005.

Historical Trends Voter Turnout in Honduras

As in other countries, there are various theories that try to explain declines in voter participation rates. Some attribute this to cultural factors or lack of voter interest, others to the existence of institutional barriers linked to the voter registry. However, there is no reliable, verifiable or trustworthy information available to undertake a grounded analysis of these turnout statistics.

VOTING STATION

Instructions for Observer

Note your observer CODE and then the number of your voting station clearly. When stating your CODE and voting station, do so by stating the digits one by one, left to right, including zeros.

Remember that you need to make two calls:

Order of calls	Main	Alternative
1. Computer Center
2. Data Backup

In case of emergency, call

--	--	--

If you are not permitted to observe or are expelled from the polling station, call Emergencies.

- Upon answering the OPERATOR will say "Hello, computing center"
- If you have problems connecting to the Computing Center, try three times. If you still cannot connect, proceed to call Data Backup.
- If for any reason the F1 call was not transmitted, begin transmitting F2 by saying "F2" immediately afterwards, transmit F1.
- The telephone OPERATOR will ask for your CODE and VOTING STATION.
- Your response to the telephone OPERATOR should be clear and distinct. In the event your call is interrupted, call again. You should begin reading the form from the beginning.
- Upon transmitting each line of the results for the presidential election, you should end the line with the word votes and then continue with the next line, as below:
 A. '0 5 0 votes' (ZERO, FIVE, ZERO, VOTES).
- If he/she does not have all the information, the OPERATOR will ask you to repeat your responses.
- Once this form has been transmitted, turn in forms F1 and F2 to the corresponding coordinator as soon as possible.
